The purpose of this course is to search, identify, screen, select, train, deploy and sponsor expertly trained local, regional, national and global Mass Media Campaign Support Management teams capable of handling multiple publishing engagements within multiple Platform Nation's Media Network Opportunities Amongst the African countries, Nigeria boasts of an outspoken media. Although somewhat oppressed under dictatorship by government or the popular establishment in the past, it offers various opportunities.

According to PWC, a total of $4.8 billion was generated by Nigeria's media and entertainment industry. In their report, the mass media is the fastest-expanding major market in global ranking with positive projections. Outlets for local and international content are robust. Over 100 print sources convey local and national information in the newspapers. Nigeria's 36 states feature at least a television and radio station. In total, 700 TVs and radio stations are spread all over the country based on the National Broadcasting Commission (NBC) estimates.

A critical examination of the local, regional, and international media provides an insight into what and where are the Nation's Media Networking opportunities. Various theoretical frameworks surround communication and media as a whole. Viewing it from a perspective of what content is being promoted, through which channel, and under what intervention is the opportunity better understood. In the past, the Nigerian Media Network Opportunities were defined by radio, print, and television with the government. It has an interesting and very long history, but the landscape is shifting towards digital media.

The digital media platforms have disrupted the Nation's Media Network Opportunities. At large, Africa has not been left behind in the digital boom. Mobile phones have dominated the social media conversation. What is unfolding is networking opportunities through internet-based tools and platforms. To put this into perspective, in 2009, 10 million active users were African's. Now the figure has surpassed 17 million and is on a steady rise. Globally a seismic shift is witnessed as more and more companies show interest in the expanding pool of Africa internet users that presents a more promising future.

Geographic sectors One may ask, what role does mass media play? Whether written, spoken, or broadcast, mass media is intended to communicate to a large audience. Mass media provides the technology and means to reach such an audience. Communication is shaped by the prevailing geographical patterns. The current saturation that is witnessed in the media has a significant force in modern culture. This was not the case before. The geography of media and communication presents an interdisciplinary approach in understanding communication theory, human geography, and media studies. There is a need for the strategic management of various facets of the media. The geography of media and communication is highlighted under the following

- Places-in-media - is the significance raised by the circulation of a symbol, landscape, and news imagery amongst others in all sorts of media at a particular time.
- Media-in-places - is the use of media to alter functionalities of places such as classrooms or a home
- Media-in-spaces - are the existing communication infrastructure. A good example is a historical telegraph or contemporary structure like fiber optic cables.

- Spaces-in-media - as ideas, information, and images move and spread, they diffuse differently through the people.

It is essential to understand more than the target group. Strategic deploying and placing of information in the mass media culminates in the outcome of the results. Most Active Groups in society, not everyone is in need of media planning and consulting campaigns. But this is not the case for an Author, CEO, Politician, Celebrity, Business Owner, Thought Leaders, Start-Ups, New Product Developers, Board Member, and Professional Artist. Media channels like state television reach tens of millions of views. But there is a catch when identifying the most active groups.

The digital divide widens the gap in the usage and access to information and communication technology. Although with the rapid technological advancement, there is relative inequality. Riots have dominated the Northern Regions of Nigeria whenever sensitive and controversial statements that incline towards authoritarianism are passed in the media. The 2020 figures put social media users in Nigeria at 24.59 million out of its 99.05 million internet users. Compared to the rate of traditional media consumption, the young population is heavily consuming media content. Political ideologies are rapidly popping up on social tweets as politicians fight to swing citizen's opinions. On the other hand, celebrity culture is dependent on popularity in the social scene. Celebrity scandals populate daily BuzzFeed on the website that hype stories and keep the conversation going. Top mass media agency includes Positive Thinking Agency Ad Hang Sol PR As a marketer keeping up with the latest trends can be a tedious hustle.

A community of like-minded people helps tackle these challenges and provides a platform for growth. Untapped Media Sectors Far beyond the normative, that has defined the media over a long time lies numerous untapped sectors. These sectors are the center stage of what media will be in the near future. The packaging of a message is designed for a specific target group when conducting a mass media campaign. Social media, photography, and digital marketing harness the growing market presented by the current generation. It is useful as proven time and again when conducting mass media campaigns with a high impact of intervention scale. Promotional messages can be run seamlessly together with lifestyle content heavily consumed by the rapidly growing population. A picture is more than a thousand words they say. It, therefore, begs the question of what characteristics of mass media are associated with effectiveness. It does not come as a surprise that powerful imagery conveys the best information. Stories, whether individual or corporate, can be crafted using branded visual content that is impactful. Photography integrates well with social media platforms to pass a strong message without the necessity of promoting the content on social media platforms.

Apart from the traditional media sectors such as magazines, radio, billboards, and cinema, other untapped media sectors include websites, viral marketing, banner advertisements, pop-ups, and QR codes. The element of interactivity featured in these forms of media is massive. It provides the key stakeholders with the ability to actively engage with a Massive Mass Media campaign increasing its effectiveness. Businesses, organizations, and individuals are able to analyze their marketing and branding efforts and understand what is working and not working for them. Untapped media sectors streamline the mass media campaigns process while ensuring effort and monetary resources are best spent.
